These quarantine haircuts guarantee a happy ending.

Webcam sex site ImLive is offering a new kind of titillating service in the wake of the coronavirus pandemic: haircut tutorials called Sexy Cuts.

Clients can pick from a bevy of beautiful models with a background in hair styling to direct their quarantine cut over video chat for anywhere from 58 cents to $5.80 per minute depending on the model's popularity and experience.

Since Sexy Cuts launched last Friday, the service has doled out over 1,400 haircuts to mostly men all over the globe.

But it's not just shearing strands that the ladies are offering up.

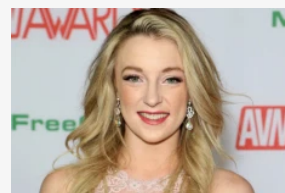

"Some guys just want companionship and someone to talk to while they cut their hair," says Adrian Stoneman, vice president of ImLive. "And other guys just want to get down to business, get their haircut squared away and then enjoy some sexy time with the stylist after."

Cam model Valentina Lopez graduated from the Toscana Medellín Beauty Academy in Colombia and has given 20 haircuts so far on ImLive.

"I was nervous at first, but I now feel confident and like I'm back at the academy," she says.

Whenever a client books the 19-year-old, she starts by recommending a set of tools including professional scissors, a spray bottle filled with water, a buzzer and a trimmer.

"It's very important to know the client's desire, take into account the texture, volume, et cetera, of the hair and give an honest assessment," Lopez tells The Post.

And she spices up more than just the hairdo.

"In most cases the customer requests a little extra," she says. "It can be a certain outfit, striptease, butt shake . . . It makes getting a haircut fun! It doesn't have to be boring and mundane."

Lopez recently instructed a cut on a 29-year-old accountant from New Jersey, who wished to keep his name anonymous for work reasons.

His hair "was becoming a nuisance" and "always falling over my eyes," he says. "I was hot and bothered with a bad hairdo, essentially."

After a friend sent him a video describing Sexy Cuts, he decided to give it a shot.

"I live alone and am lonely, don't have a girlfriend and wanted a second opinion," he says. He opted for Lopez because, "I have a thing for long black-haired girls and she seemed experienced enough to help me achieve my desired haircut."

He set up a mini barber shop in his bathroom and pointed the video camera directly at his head.

"I gave her a twirl, showing her what I was working with [and] then told her what I was looking for: short on the sides and longer on top," he says. "We joked that this was a look many guys my age were looking for these days. It seems to be en vogue."

Lopez then instructed him to use the 1.5mm guard on his buzzer for the sides, and directed how to cut the longer tresses up top.

"We chatted about life and pop culture and sports and how we were coping with the quarantines we were under. She didn't make it awkward at all," he says.

And he was pleased with the results.

"I'd rather not divulge what happened after the haircut culminated," he says. "I'll just say it was a happy ending."
