S25	R_31ivyHJmHYb7kBs	25 to 34	Professional	Master's degree	Coder	I think that real success in FOSS is finding a way to sustainably contribute. It's easy to get into a situation where you give more time and energy to projects for free, and you never get support for doing so. In the long run, this tends to burn people out and leave projects orphaned. Finding a way to support your FOSS efforts is critical to the long term success of the ecosystem. I think that this support can take many forms, but at some level it needs to be financial.	Living from OSS	Security	United States of America	Unpaid Contributor	Man

S177	R_scZ8EgCIkx8GEnL	25 to 34	Professional	Master's degree	Coder	I never looked at successful people, but at successful communities. I am not sure what a successful person would be. Successful communities are the ones that learn how to delegate (instead of concentrate) work loads to be able to handle contributions as they come. Sometimes, it is not simple to find a balance between delegating work and giving access to the project resources to the contributors.
