Please read the following information on the use of topical corticosteroids thoroughly

This treatment has been used worldwide for approx. 50 years. Hence, its advantages and disadvantages are very well known.

Possible side effects might be thinning of the skin with translucent vessels, locally increased growth of hair, skin bruises or acne-like skin changes. Very rarely, side effects affecting not only the skin such as worsening of diabetes, osteoporosis, high blood pressure or reduced own production of cortisone might occur.

The above-mentioned side effects occur in case of inappropriate use of topical corticosteroids during weeks or months. If used as prescribed they hardly ever occur. Therefore the benefits outweigh the risks of the treatment with topical corticosteroids.

Topical corticosteroids are classified by their potency. The doctor will determine the appropriate potency of the steroid containing cream/ointment according to your individual skin problem. Thus, side effects can be avoided or at least consideralby reduced. Early signs of side effects would attract the doctor's attention in the medical follow-up, so that the treatment would be discontinued timely.
