WHY RECOGNISE REVIEW?

The Global State of Peer Review

Publons will tomorrow publish the inaugural Global State of Peer Review report.

This study of peer review is powered by a survey of more than 11,000 respondents as well as data from ScholarOne, Web of Science, and Publons itself.

The survey has validated Publons' core assumption that recognition for peer review is hotly desired and keenly appreciated by researchers.

Peer review is important

98% of responding researchers believe that peer review is either important or very important for ensuring the general quality and integrity of scholarly communication.

Peer review is important

98% of responding researchers believe that peer review is either important or very important for ensuring the general quality and integrity of scholarly communication.

Researchers see peer review as:

- part of their job,
- something they should reciprocate
- a valuable way to stay up-to-date with research trends in their field, and
- a necessary contribution to the integrity of published literature.

42% of researchers reported that they commonly reject peer review invitations because they are "too busy with my own research", yet peer review is an essential part of that research's path to publication.

Peer review is under recognised

42% of researchers reported that they commonly reject peer review invitations because they are "too busy with my own research", yet peer review is an essential part of that research's path to publication.

A lack of incentive for researchers to review has led to an imbalance in workloads. Publons estimates that 10% of reviewers are performing 50% of the world's reviews.

A lack of incentive for researchers to review has led to an imbalance in workloads. Publons estimates that 10% of reviewers are performing 50% of the world's reviews.

This imbalance in turn leads to problems such as:

- reduced diversity of perspective and expertise,
- increasing difficulty in finding reviewers, and
- lengthy delays in publication.

Recognition motivates

84.8% of survey respondents think institutions should more explicitly require and recognise peer review contributions.

Recognition motivates

84.8% of survey respondents think institutions should more explicitly require and recognise peer review contributions.

83% of respondents believe that greater recognition and career incentives to peer review would have a positive (54.7%) or extremely positive (28.6%) impact on the overall efficacy of the peer review process.

Peer review with Publons & ORCiD

since 2015

more than 500,000 reviews

Publons can supplement ORCiD peer review histories by filling in verified reviews for any journal or conference in the world using our various independent and publisher-backed verification methods.

Peer review with Publons & ORCiD
Publons also allows researchers to import their publication record from ORCiD in order to track:

- citations in Web of Science
- post-publication engagement via Altmetric and Publons' own post-publication review platform.

Searching & linking

A Publons Search & Link wizard will allow ORCiD users to "pull" their peer review history into ORCiD.

The addition of this wizard will increase visibility of ORCiD's peer review capability which is currently hidden until populated.

Peer review recognition is important and with Publons + ORCiD, it's easy

> It is one of the best professional interactions. Publons helped me to evidence my work as a reviewer and to be proud of it. I am grateful for it, because my effort was minimal and your team has done this amazing work.
