

An interactive online tool mapping responsible research assessment reforms in academia

Alex Rushforth, Marta Sienkiewicz, Haley Hazlett, Zen Faulkes, Anna Hatch, Ruth Schmidt, Sarah de Rijcke, Stephen Curry

About Reformscape

- ✓ International efforts to reform how research is recognized and rewarded in academia have gathered substantial momentum.
- ✓ But reform of research assessment is challenging because it impacts established processes, cultures and norms.
- ✓ Organizations may not always be sure where is the best place to start.
- ✓ With Reformscape they can explore how others around the world have introduced and implemented new responsible research assessment practices.
- ✓ Users can search and filter through documents on reforms affecting hiring, promotion, tenure and retention, as well as specially curated summaries of organizational efforts and their progress.

Features

- ✓ A rich variety of reform activities, including attempts to recognize open research, integrity, societal impact, equity and inclusion, and promote responsible metrics.
- ✓ More than 200 unique items of source material included (and counting).
- ✓ Covers research performing organizations from across more than 20 countries.
- ✓ Freely available.

Figure 1 Reformscape allows users to search our archive of reforms for specific types of intervention

Added value

- ✓ Helps those starting out to orient themselves and gain inspiration.
- ✓ Those organizations well on their way to reforms can document and share their progress.
- ✓ Stimulate mutual learning and stir discussion and debate with wider reform communities about progress being made.
- ✓ Co-created with the community
- ✓ A live artefact – that will continue updating and accepting new entries!

Figure 2 How curated summaries of research performing organizations' reforms appear in Reformscape

Stay in touch

- ✓ Reformscape will be released in late 2023
- ✓ Further details can be found at sfdora.org/project-tara/ or by scanning the QR code
- ✓ Know a reform effort that should be included on Reformscape? Please contact reformscape@sfdora.org

edu.nl/pqec6

Funding acknowledgement

Reformscape is a product of Project TARA, a three-year project funded by Arcadia, a charitable fund of Lisbet Rausing and Peter Baldwin.